

Dr Neil Paul

Dr Neil Paul is a GP Partner in Sandbach Cheshire. He was a PEC member for CECPT holding roles such as urgent care lead and primary care quality lead. Having helped setup the local CCG he jumped to the provider side and now helps run a couple of GP federations, is a Director of Central Cheshire Integrated Care Partnership a community services provider and works with a range of IT companies helping them develop products to help transform primary care. He writes a monthly column for digitalhealth.net, regularly presents at conferences on IT related topics and last year won the British Computer Society John Perry Prize for helping develop Apex – a business intelligence tool for primary care. Rather than do a MBA – he has tried his hand at several businesses to gain real world experience; including selling BBQs online, running an events business and selling apps, which he wrote himself, on the Apple

App store. He is currently a honorary Senior Lecturer at the University of Liverpool School of Management helping supervise 2 PHD students.
